

This score is in C with quarter-tones enharmonically respelled for clarity.

It Was Raining in Delft, Compression 5, and Compression 6 are notated as if at concert pitch but with an indication of where an entire passage is to be sung a quarter-tone flat or a quarter-tone sharp.

♭ quarter-tone flat

♯ quarter-tone sharp

♭♭ three-quarter-tone flat

♯♯ three-quarter-tone sharp

Objects and Interludes is a continuous setting of two poems intercut with Pool, a quodlibet, and twelve Compressions (variations, in effect, on Pool but with overall less material worked at each appearance). In addition, a background Scrim emerges from time to time, sometimes acting as accompaniment to the soprano's two songs.

Each instrument, including the piano, is retuned. Players have two sets of parts; a Rehearsal Part which, when necessary, contains two staves, the upper one with the notes to be played (in standard tuning), and the lower one showing the pitches resulting on the retuned instrument. The Performance Part contains only the upper – performing – staff of the Rehearsal Part with no legend.

Objects and Interludes begins at concert pitch. The first song, It Was Raining in Delft, is performed a quarter-tone flat, interrupted by Compression 3 and Compression 4, both at concert pitch.

The Scrim returns at concert pitch, interrupted by Compression 5 and Compression 6, both a quarter-tone sharp.

Scrim 4 follows and continues independently under the second song, Seven Happy Endings. Scrim 4 begins with just piano and harp – each with a few strings detuned – later the scordatura viola and violoncello join on their open strings.

Scrim 5 and Scrim 6, still under Seven Happy Endings, are for the open, scordatura, strings of the entire quartet.

Seven Happy Endings continues at concert pitch and is intercut by Compression 10, 11, and 12, each a quarter-tone sharper than concert pitch excepting the un-retuned piano strings.

FLUTE / CLARINET

Suggested multiphonic fingerings are included in the parts. The player may substitute other, similar, multiphonics for those notated; the texture, dynamic, register, and color are more important than the exact pitches.

VOICE

The glissandi, beginning at m.502, should extend for at least for at least a fifth below or above the starting pitch. They should sound a little otherworldly; not quite Spechstimme but moving towards it.
